DISSIDENT PERSPECTIVES

America's Extreme Right

Decoding the Hate

The Old Formula: The Right deflects blowback from the [exploited] masses into nationalism--[the belief] that the enemy is FOREIGN [rather than the elite economic class or big business itself]--focusing instead on a "foreign conspiracy" or immigrants.

Before improving the condition of the masses, [they say,] it's necessary to improve the position of THE NATION, [with more war (profits) or austerity, etc.] "Nation" is code for the corporate elite class [itself.]

--Fascism and Big Business--

THE BIG PICTURE

Before raising the topic in this issue of that lowest form of American theater known as US politics, let's start by dispelling any remaining illusions of democracy in America, which apparently existed once, according to Tocqueville. The misapprehension of continuing government by consent, which ended with the US civil war, is constantly conjured in the public mind through the pixelated shadow world of on-screen talking heads...A world already envisaged, in an incredibly prescient feat of religious imagination, by the native Iroquois American Indian, in what they named "False Faces"--floating heads without bodies that appeared (in forests) and did people harm by casting spells over them. An excellent image of today's corporate media. Maybe Bill Burroughs was right... the evil has always been there.

In the truth free media zone, what is of interest is whatever serves the agenda or adds new sparkle to established dogma.

Reality-based opinion is heresy.

Talking head

Iroquois 'False Face' Mask

Which explains why you haven't heard there that the US is a de facto one party (Fascist) state.

OUTLAW POLICE STATE

We're not in Kansas anymore.

It may still be news to some that there has been a fundamental change in the political character of the US, with effective suspension of the Constitution, an end to freedoms once protected in the Bill of Rights, and the abandonment of the rule of law as power is concentrated in the executive branch of government in a one Party state (see below). The final stage in the transformation to an authoritarian society of control was not a response to a crisis (9/11 pitch of 'freedom for security'), but a violent transition from republic to totalitarian empire, enabled by technological change and the crime of the 9/11 catalyst event.

FEMINIST BOMBING

Intolerance as Social Progressiveness

Besides hate speech, another variant of attempts by Western multi-nationals--through their skills in media and politics in New York/Atlanta and Washington--to retroactively justify ongoing anti-Muslim wars is to absurdly invoke women's rights, as if transforming millions of Muslim women into war widows, or maiming and killing them directly, were some kind of 'empowerment.' (When the West commits crimes, it does so righteously, and demands its victims say 'thank-you.') Examples of this 'innovative' propaganda variant include the high-profile bans in Western countries on the wearing of the hijab. This is thinly veiled race politics, legal stigmatization marking the bogeyman du jour. It is chauvinist intolerance of cultural difference masquerading as progressiveness, to mask the crime of wars for empire.

Or take this op-ed piece headlined "Women must never again be ashamed to be female." In this gem of sophistry, the author suggests that Muslim women wear veils out of shame of their femininity. This claim demands examination. Women of the Middle East still have their femininity, which they consider a very beautiful thing. So beautiful, in fact, that it should be partly covered, as you also do in the West. The difference is only quantitative (how much to cover). This is called a cultural difference: the varied interpretations and reactions of different peoples to what some call Creation. Like having a different word, in their language, for 'ignorant,' 'dishonest,' or 'malicious.' To use such differences as the basis for war propaganda is as depraved and hysterical as advocating war over skirt lengths. No difference is too small, apparently, to be exploited for large-scale corporate killing by its facilitators.

If anything, ironically it is the "feminist" suppression of femininity in America, in a confusion of equal rights with equivalence, that begs the question whether or not it is sufficiently valued. Cultures that never banished femininity in the first place could not be said to be ashamed of it. "Save femininity," yes! In the USA!

The trend in the US, pioneer of look-alike mass-produced cars, seems to be an eroding of 'gender-based' (biology-based) identity altogether: another cultural symptom of the intolerance of difference in a factory society that demands uniformity (machines cannot tolerate differences in the objects they process). An expected, synergistic result of this adaptation of the human to the machine would be falling reproduction rates, or population control--a long-standing goal of Western power because a requirement for stable dictatorship (see Bertrand Russell's Science and Society). If demographics is destiny, the masses, in voluntarily limiting their number, better serve their masters by decreasing their collective political power and simultaneously aiding in their own pacification. Also, as loyalty to family is replaced by allegiance to state, human ties are weakened and a rival for loyalty is eliminated.

The point is tolerance of difference, and a caveat against manipulation.

To return to the editorial, taken in its context of continual war-mongering against Muslim nations, the sinister inference of this hypocritical smear on Islam is that cultures deemed at odds with US dogma are thereby candidates for annihilation, to do away with 'out-moded' ways of life. The ultimate in fashion police. ➤

The traditional two US business parties may be thought of as separate brand names for the Party, marketed like colas (Coke or Pepsi?), which after the initial hype fizz has gone flat, are bad for your health.

You don't 'vote' for the Party, its monopoly on governance is understood. Neither its name nor even its existence is generally known by the public, which it maintains in strict, distracted ignorance. Membership is a sine qua non of exercising top-level political power in the US. Almost every US president including the current one, his challenger-to-be, the other candidates, and going back to Herbert Hoover, has been a member. This is of course the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR). The traditional two US business parties may be thought of as overlapping factions, or separate brand names for the Party, marketed like colas (Coke or Pepsi?), which after the initial hype fizz has gone flat, are bad for your health.

There is no People's Party. But you can still go to the polls, if it makes you feel better.

Filled with CFR members, both sides may be counted on to adhere to the essentials of the Party's agenda. 'Selection' is a better description for the winnowing process than 'election,' which decides, in the case of president, who will implement the agenda of a mix of Party interests and be its public spokesman. There is no People's Party. But you can still go to the polls, if it makes you feel better.

The truth is that the American leadership likes a rigged game.

Ever the control freaks, the truth is that the American leadership likes a rigged game. Despite the play-acting in a flurry of televised candidates' debates, the national political debate has already ended. You lost. Taking part in the misty-eyed, flag-waving glorification of "the Homeland" may bring the false comfort of conformity but in reality, it is only professing your faithful allegiance to your Master. Your interests are lost in the shuffle.

Finally a note on the sensitive nature of some of the content herein. It's no pleasant task to step into the muck of hate speech and race politics, if only to point it out. Here in the West it's so ubiquitous as to go unnoticed, like ugly wallpaper. The harder Right the politics, the more hate speech, to try to justify war and hide behind scapegoats from class war blowback. We point it out only to show the fascist character of the Party. This is obviously not the same as endorsing the views, and to make such a claim would be a clear case of shooting the messenger.

In the gnarled hands of North American editorialists, the admonition "never again" against genocide becomes a justification for genocide. Call it 'feminist bombing,' a new twist in war propaganda on the already twisted oxymoron called 'humanitarian bombing,' heard recently concerning Syria and Libya, and made infamous in Vietnam in the nonsensical phrase "to destroy in order to save."

The opinion piece is only one example from what has become a major new propaganda front; part of a regularly changing story line surrounding illegitimate wars that began as 9-11 vengeance, then hunt and capture (of a Nemesis), followed by search and destroy (WMD), and now, amazingly, an unlikely 'feminist' crusade that slaughters men, women and children alike. Of course a constantly changing story continually contradicts itself, like the spiel of a con artist...and in so doing, discredits both.

A GROTESQUE FARCE

Welcome to the USA. Leave Your Dignity at the Door.

The [security] gauntlet is meant to strip Americans of their dignity, to humiliate a nation into subservience as its people are stripped of one basic right after another in the new, post-911 fascist order.

Ritual humiliation of Americans

A free people ?

How is it that up until the 21st century, millions of citizens travelled en masse globally without their governments ever subjecting them to invasive, humiliating and illegal searches, as happens now to passengers young and old, one-by-one, in the USA? As many commentators have already noted, it is the function of intelligence services to detect a safety threat in advance and then to focus on a narrow group of suspects, leaving the law-abiding public at large unmolested, literally. To treat all of the public as suspects as is done now in the US is to function as if the intelligence services had been abolished, leaving authorities to rely on 'hand-inspection' of millions of people, as if the 'eyes' among the organs of government had been put out, leaving it to blindly grope its hapless public. But the intelligence services haven't been abolished. To the contrary, they've multiplied, with the creation of more than a dozen (unconstitutional) domestic spying agencies, as taxpayers fund a new economic boom in security fascism and pay for the invasion of their own personal privacy. Which means that the illegal (See article Outlaw_Police_State) and grotesque farce of violating old ladies' persons looking for bombs is not of course about security but is merely a pretext for something else. The gauntlet of scandalous virtual strip searches and disgraceful pat-downs is meant to strip Americans of their dignity, to humiliate a nation of people into subservience as they are stripped of one basic right after another in the new, post-911 fascist order. In reality, it's not the public at all that poses a threat, but off-the-rails tyrannical corporate government that poses an ongoing threat to the public. Part of which is the mushrooming growth of security/intel on the stiffening remains of the US body politic--a parasitic growth, terminal to its host.

Nazis forcing a Jew to kneel

HATE SPEECH

Demonizing Targets for Genocide

Thankfully, hate speech is now illegal in many countries, which have banned <sup>1</sup> explicitly inciting violence against groups, as happened in Nazi Germany, where thousands of Storm Troopers marched in the streets chanting “Kill the J**s!” * Even as recently as 1994 during the Rwandan genocide, RTLM hate radio broadcasts sent out the heinous message “Kill the [Tutsi] cockro**hes!” <sup>2</sup>

Today hate speech is all around us in the West but usually in more subtle form, as code words and insinuation, or as elaborate smears--a discretion necessary to avoid legal prosecution for incitation to genocide. In war propaganda, it demonizes or dehumanizes the particular group to victimize. Insults and humiliation mark out intended victim(s), like red paint, for slaughter. Its effects can also be seen in rising hate crime at home. The target changes over time, but the modus operandi remains the same.

It would seem that full spectrum dominance of corporate media wasn't enough. There's a new sort of covert, targeted 'broadcasting' going on with Directed Energy Weapons.

To take at face value the PR material put out by the Pentagon (never a good idea), you might think that the Joint Non-Lethal Weapons Program (JNLWP, est. 1997) RF Division conducts a lot of bioeffects research aimed at optimizing pilot performance and the like. Though you wouldn't normally associate weapons research with such things, you would be forgiven for believing it after seeing on the various websites, factsheets and other official literature, as well as in the research documentation itself, the numerous references to "centers of excellence," "human effectiveness" and "human-centered" work, etc. For example:

...advances in biotechnology, biobehavior, and neuroscience are used to enhance and extend the human performance of our Airmen..<sup>1</sup>

In this context, it's easy to forget that the Non-Lethal Weapons Directorate is all about fielding and employing weapons to immediately "incapacitate targeted personnel or materiel," according to the same AFRL literature. So why the contradictory approach? Or has the unwitting reader stepped into a minefield of disinformation?

The predominant focus on performance enhancement in the literature (in relation to 'Human Effectiveness') is grounded in traditional aviation medicine concern with the bioeffects of things like the influence of g-force and air pressure on jet pilots; claims of research for purposes of meeting safety guidelines are bolstered by the weapons' sub-lethal nature--by design they are supposed to limit the risk of (immediate) fatality.

But positive uses of bioeffects research that are very often hinted at are ethical and legal worlds away from the kinds of gothic military research that's been conducted for much more than a decade now under the cover story of "human effectiveness" or safety, which has necessarily filtered into research descriptions themselves. Other reviewers have also noted a 'semantic strategy' in the "tendency of the military to refer to 'non-lethal' weapons not as weapons but as 'capabilities' or 'technologies', which extends to individual types of weapons. This ... is largely for policy and public relations effect in gaining acceptance of new weapons or even prohibited weapons."<sup>2</sup>

'Depleted' Uranium Weapons

The 'Slow-kill' Left Behind

Uranium is the heaviest metal existing in nature. Atoms of uranium are not only the heaviest but also the largest and the most unstable of any element. These characteristics explain the interest in using uranium as a fissible material or fuel in nuclear reactors. In fact, it's an isotope or variant of uranium that's used in nuclear fission. This isotope, U<sub>235</sub>, is highly unstable and therefore easily broken apart, releasing high levels of energy.

U<sub>235</sub> is present in mined uranium at the rate of only about 0.7 percent. So to get one kilogram of the fissible U<sub>235</sub> it takes literally tons of mined uranium. The rest of the uranium, which is U<sub>238</sub>, is without interest, at least for applications in nuclear energy.

In practice, the natural uranium is enriched to a level of U<sub>235</sub> high enough to sustain a nuclear reaction (3%). But because of the great disproportion between the two isotopes, the production of the fissile U<sub>235</sub> results in a by-product of huge quantities of non-fissile U<sub>238</sub>, or depleted uranium--DU for short.

Though depleted of U<sub>235</sub>, U<sub>238</sub> still retains all the chemical properties of natural uranium, such as its heaviness. Bars of U<sub>238</sub> have a density nearly twice that of lead, which in fact is what uranium would become after radioactive decay, lasting nine billion years. And because of a plentiful supply, it sells at about 8 times less than tungsten, the next least costly heavy metal. Because of its great heaviness and its low price, this material has been used as ballast or counterweight in industrial machines, in aeronautics and in ship building. Its been used in jumbo jets, for example, to get an even weight distribution on the aircraft.

It's also used in weapons. It's used in armor, in so-called tank-busting shells, and in large, "bunker buster" missiles--which carry a couple of tons of DU and can penetrate thick concrete walls. [9kg U<sub>235</sub>] Actually, before this metal can be used in such weapons, there's a metallurgic process that's necessary to increase its rigidity. That's because another unusual property of uranium is that although it may be heavy and dense it's not very hard. So in fact alloys like titanium are added to strengthen it. The tips of the shells are probably alloyed with a metal of high rigidity--such as beryllium.

Beryllium is not radioactive in its elemental form, but it is highly toxic. Uranium itself IS radioactive, in all its forms. It's both a chemical and a radiological poison.

Most radiation emitted from depleted uranium can be blocked inside a casing or cover. When it's used in arms however, the material is combusted or burned. It starts to burn on impact or on detonation. When it hits its target, which may be heavily populated areas--as well as tanks, or bunkers--then it's reduced to fine particles which can be breathed in. Radioactive particles that contaminate whatever they contact: dust, rain, groundwater, food. Once inside the body, the radiation cannot be blocked and is continually absorbed, even after the death of the victim, from cancer.

So are we really talking about nuclear weapons here? Now nuclear weapons are classified as those that use nuclear fission or fusion. Nuclear bombs. This is not the case with DU weapons. That's why they can be sold as non-nuclear or conventional arms. But their use has been called "nuclear war by other means." Because you still get radioactive fallout and its long-term, lethal effects if it enters the body. A new kind of fallout, that doesn't rain from the sky, but is delivered by missiles. So no, not nuclear weapons, but radioactive fallout-- without the mushroom cloud. Weapons of mass destruction.

The use of beryllium as an alloy in DU weapons would contravene a chemical arms treaty that every country making these arms has signed. They're sold fairly freely without their exact composition being specified. Tests have been done to monitor their use in war zones. Some studies have indicated the presence of U<sub>236</sub>*, which is worrisome. U<sub>236</sub> doesn't exist in natural or depleted uranium. It exists in spent fuel—enriched uranium that's been used in a nuclear reactor. In other words, reprocessed or treated nuclear waste. Dirty uranium. A waste product, which arms makers get for free. Nuclear waste, which contains traces of even more dangerous by-products such as plutonium, which has also been detected.

Now even if the DU were clean, or natural, you'd still have the damaging health effects of depleted uranium alone, as I mentioned...If a single particle of DU dust is breathed in, it causes cancer as well as genetic mutation.

The fallout stays radioactive for a period twice as long as the earth is old. Nine billion years. And there's no known method of de-contamination. Only prohibitively costly clean-up. Yet thousands of tons of DU have been dropped by NATO in countries that have been attacked with it. Something like how the Romans salted the land of their rivals in Carthage. To render it sterile. But here you have uranium dust which poisons the land, the people, and their offspring. Sad to say, but it's meant to ensure foreign access to valuable natural resources or strategic areas into the future. That's the world we live in, under capitalism.

So what you have here in fact is a so-called "slow kill" of affected civilians and soldiers in the war theatre because the result is not immediate. And there's the legal loophole. The victims develop fatal cancers later on, from exposure to contaminated food or water, for example. The effects are seen across generations, with a high incidence of birth defects. A 'pre-emptive strike' you might say, as the Nazis did at Nuremberg trying to justify their wars of aggression.

To come back to the legal implications, surprisingly, while there's a ban on chemical poisoning of soldiers there is none on radiation poisoning of civilians. The international treaties banning chemical weapons, like toxic gas, and biological weapons, like viruses, don't apply to weapons using radioactive material.

As for nuclear weapons, you have a test ban treaty and a non-proliferation treaty, but no international ban on their use. There you would have universal condemnation though in the court of world opinion. Because the devastation is immediate. It's more obvious. That's why there's a political restraint on overt nuclear attacks, making the use of radiation as a weapon a covert affair.

A new class of directed energy weapons uses non-ionizing radiation, like microwaves. I don't believe there's any international arms control agreement yet in place to ban the use of these incapacitating 'non-lethal' weapons, which are used for covert repression of political dissidence through remote torture.

Unfortunately, there may be no specific ban in international law on using radiation as a weapon. But there are legal protections that exist, at least on paper, such as the UN Charter, the Geneva Conventions, the UN Conventions on Human Rights, which outlaw torture, wars of aggression, the targeting of civilians, and genocide.

In a political version of bait-and-switch, even as the 'war on terror' is declared over (Obama, April 24, 2012), the new security superstructure it engendered remains whirring in place, keeping its electronic eyes and ears vigilantly trained on the enemy--Americans. They are not protecting us from terrorists... They are protecting themselves from us.

Case of the Two Pariahs

It's instructive to compare the cases of the post-coup US and Nazi Germany. The Reichstag fire decree of Feb. 28, 1933 "to remedy dangers to public safety" ended the very same freedoms that Americans have lost, in a piecemeal fashion, since 2001, such as habeas corpus (Guantanamo, NDAA 2012), political speech (see 'Info War' below), privacy of communications (mass surveillance, see below)--or are losing--free assembly ('illegal' protests, free speech pens), etc.

All Power to the Executive

Germany's Enabling Act of March 23, 1933 established dictatorship by giving the Cabinet the authority to legislate, merging executive and legislative power, followed by the creation of special tribunals for executive exercise of judiciary power. In the US this authoritarian merging has been imperfect in form (despite Anthrax attacks on the Congress and the creation of short-circuit 'Super Committees') but still effective, with executive orders 'legislating' military tribunals (Nov. 13, 2001) and surveillance (Terrorist Surveillance Program, 2002); plain lawlessness like Guantanamo, torture and executive 'kill lists' of citizens; and much rubber stamping of other illegal deviancies.

For their part, stacked Courts in a hijacked system have reliably gone along for the downhill ride to historic ignominy, even pronouncing that the judiciary branch lacks jurisdiction (4th US Circuit Court of Appeals decision, Jan. 23, 2012) on (US citizen Jose) Padilla v. Hanft, because of 'state secrets,' making legal redress (for Americans tortured by the state) a political decision, not a legal one. This is the explicit abandonment of rule of law and the definition of a police state.

Police state: "little or no distinction between the law and the exercise of political power by the executive"--http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Police\_state

Legal Note:

Abrogation of Rule of Law

In the US

Legal commentators have noted a strategy of work-arounds to legality, an extra-legal, parallel framework for lawlessness that's been called jurisdiction by permanent exception, justified by a state of 'permanent crisis.'

As law of the land, the US Constitution trumps aberrant legislation and executive orders, according to US jurisprudence. But this legality becomes purely academic when corrupt courts fall in line, as now. Legal redress for violation of constitutional rights is therefore not possible in American courts today, where government spying, torture, detention and execution without trial have all been 'legalized.' Legal proof as it were of the crime of killing off the US Constitution, until further notice, a dead letter.

Mass surveillance

Domestic spying on the citizenry violates the US constitution's Fourth Amendment ban on unreasonable search and seizure. That is why CIA spying has always been banned, in law, domestically and one reason why the FBI's covert COINTELPRO (Counter-Intelligence Program; see <http://metatexte.net/docs/pdf/COINTELPRO>) was deemed illegal by the Senate Church Committee in 1975. TSA searches are also illegal by the same law [...the right of the people to be secure in their persons against ..unreasonable searches.. shall not be violated].

Nevertheless, since the unchallenged enactment of the constitution-trampling USA Patriot Act of Oct. 26, 2001, the federal police apparatus has grown to include 16 different intelligence agencies forming overlapping dragnets for the digital data trails (including voice and location) of law-abiding citizens.

Here are six of them:

- CIA (can now collaborate with national agencies)
- DHS -"Suspicious Activity Reports"
- National Intelligence Program: National Counterterrorism Center (NCTC-kill lists) + TSC
- FBI - Terrorist Screening Center (TSC) => Joint Terrorism Task Force (JTTF) => Fusion Centers
- NSA - electronic surveillance/signals intercept (SIGINT)
- National Geospatial Intelligence Agency (NGA)- 'mapping matrix' for battlefield USA

Culture of Secrecy

One explanation for the hodge-podge, overlapping organizational approach is that the paper or e-trail of the illegal espionage is harder to follow if done by many and not one agency, a goal also served by new FOIA (Freedom of Information Act) loopholes from compliance (DOJ order Oct. 17, 2001) and 'attempts to criminalize disclosure' (D. Priest, Top Secret America, preface).

Centralization

As the three constitutional government branches merge into one, the new surveillance superstructure extends federal control over state and local law enforcement through the use of military and other federal actors in FBI-led state Fusion Centers, which even corporate press reports have compared to the local 'Red squads' (see article <http://metatexte.net/docs/index-3.html>) of 20th century America. Or COINTELPRO II with the dirty work offloaded to privateers (contractors), who also staff the spying centers along with DHS and others. The mix of actors makes it possible for 'Army intelligence' to be briefed on information collected at the local level. It also allows "both local and federal agencies to sidestep restrictions on their activities by working together" (Enemies in Blue, Kristian Williams, p. 167)

From Free Competition of Ideas to Info War

The new Fusion Centers constitute a political police force, updating COINTELPRO practices, integrating them into a military framework, and performing a function described as early as 1983 by FEMA:

...prevention of dissident groups... gaining access to U.S. opinion, or a global audience, in times of crisis.—General Frank Salzedo, chief of FEMA's Civil Security Division, 1983

USA Patriot Act ...laid down the foundation of a domestic intelligence gathering system.. tearing down the legal firewall (ca. 1975) limiting police surveillance to ongoing criminal investigation.—Jim McGee, Washington Post, Nov. 4, 2001

Militarization of Internal Security

As federal tentacles invade once sacrosanct state realms through new creatures like the Fusion Centers, state and local law enforcement has become more militarized, with paramilitary units, non-lethal weapons and military equipment acquired, and the spread of military drones into the 'homeland' battlefield (from May 2006).

For the first time, a counter-insurgency-hardened general heads the CIA. Since 2002, the military's Northern Command (NORTHCOM) has responsibility for 'homeland' defense or internal security, with 20,000 armed troops reportedly (Al Jazeera: D. Parvaz Dec. 16, 2011) deployed on the mapped domestic 'battlefield'. The 2012 National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA 2012) effectively declares war on Americans, having extended the conception of the worldwide 'war on terror' battlefield to include the 'homeland', a bid to attempt to justify potential 'enemy combatant' (enemy of the state) status for citizens and military authority for indefinite detention, torture or execution—martial law.

With Posse Comitatus limitations on the sensitive use of federal troops internally, National Guard units are reportedly being prepared for deployment across state borders (Kent State shoot thy neighbor updated to the more practicable you shoot my neighbor and I'll shoot yours).

the ostensible aims of the police and military: From criminal investigation and defense to ideological profiling and political policing--military control over political speech and the political life of the nation through permanent, institutionalized counter-insurgency at home.

When Big Business Swallows Government

It's clear that the structure of business organization under capitalism, from Board of Directors down to workers, has always been authoritarian, not democratic. Big business is politically feudalistic, with the vassal workers living off their usefulness to their corporate sponsors (lords). They have no political power within the organization to affect change over executive decision making, the balance of power or the distribution of the wealth they generate.

What characterizes our recast Western world in the 21st century is that this model of private power has encroached on the once separate and public sphere of (self-) government, replacing the remains of sovereign nation states based on the legal rights of citizens with an imperial superstructure of World Institutions (World Bank, IMF, WTO, G8, EU, etc.)--that no one voted for--organized around central banking and based on corporate profit for shareholders. A sort of feudal restoration has been set in motion, with the political hour rewound to oligarchic rule by the unaccountable private power of a financial aristocracy. The "new" order consists of imposing this regression by force and terror as one world government in a 'global society of control' (Empire: Negri, Hardt) to replace the 'disorder' of democracy. The place of the people in this brave new world has already been evoked (see article: America's Extreme Right)--it is as another raw material for the factory, to be worked, processed, consumed in the violent generation of profits.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted in 1948, articulates the idea that it is wrong to exclude any member of the human species from the circle of moral concern. This enlightened vision was a tremendous advance over earlier, more restricted views about who matters morally; yet it still excludes a far larger number of beings who can both enjoy life and suffer: nonhuman animals. They, or at least those capable of feeling pain, which at a minimum includes all vertebrates, are also entitled to concern. Pain is pain, irrespective of the species of

UN troops and Haitian police are struggling to maintain order a fortnight after the earthquake that killed 200,000 people and left more than a million homeless

Machete fights have been reported as families argue over who should have access to the desperately limited supply of tents. Yesterday UN peacekeepers were forced to use pepper spray and rubber bullets as a food hand-out at one of the biggest homeless encampments in the centre of Port-au-Prince was over-run by thousands of starving people.

"Whatever we do, it doesn't matter - they are animals," said one of the 18 Uruguayan peacekeepers in front of the collapsed National Palace, struggling to hold back the 4,000-strong crowd with a plastic shield.

As some of the troops fired pepper spray, others standing on top of a UN tank fired rubber bullets into the air, all but ignored by the people striving to get at the food supplies.

The spin is consistent with the secrecy found to be practiced, for example in the classification of what are normally public documents surrounding a 2002 evaluation report by the National Academy of Sciences' National Research Council on Non-Lethal Weapons R&D.

But available research and contract documentation as well as earlier, FOIA-obtained (Freedom of Information Act) declassified material concerning radio frequency directed energy weapons (RFDEW) in particular belie the pervasive pretense, revealing an altogether different story:

Disruption of neural control, ...convulsions, ...seizure induction, ...working memory loss, ...radiation induced fatigue, sleep induction, ...disorientation, ...power required to heat a human, ...difficulty breathing, ...risk of cataracts, ...foreshortening of time perception, ...blocking of executive functioning, ...incapacitation.<sup>3</sup>

Other human bioeffects sought for the new RF weapons have included remote behavioral influence, EEG entrainment (induced brain wave frequency), or how human brain response to certain RF stimuli may mimic schizophrenia.<sup>4</sup>

Mainstreaming Mengele

Despite the PR charade, it's clear from mad science like this, revealed in available RFDE weapons research and development documentation, that it's all about ways to remotely manipulate human physiology in order to degrade the 'human effectiveness' or performance of targeted individuals. Indeed, this is what the HED (Human Effectiveness Directorate) logo suggests. Given the nature of the research, the Air Force's "human effectiveness" should be understood in this negative sense, or as "effectiveness on humans" (of the weapons), and not as performance enhancement.

A 2005 AFRL document no longer available on the web gave a straight-up description of the nature of the human effects-based research:

This research effort is very broad, seeking to investigate incapacitating effects that can be induced through interfering with the human senses of hearing, vision, touch and smell. It will also address the effects of electrical current on various physiological systems including the central nervous system, neuromuscular interface, and endocrine system. Perhaps most profoundly some research will seek to investigate suppressive effects on the central nervous system through, for example, influencing neurotransmitter function.

--Director of the Joint Non-Lethal Weapons Directorate (JNLWD)<sup>5</sup>

Think lab frog tap dancing to electrical shocks.

Dancing around Humanitarian Law

Besides 'performance enhancement', the Mengele-like torture studies are also cloaked in euphemistic terms suggesting defensive purposes (studied bio-effect "may be of non-lethal weapon concern."). But if the aim of research like this were truly to protect from exposure, and not to inflict such nefarious if non-lethal effects, surely a more effective route would be to work towards an explicit ban of these weapons and of the electromagnetic manipulation of human physiology, as already called for in a resolution of the European Parliament [Jan. 28, 1999, A4-0005/99], rather than establishing a new military wing to develop (and operate?) them, as has been done in the US.

Instead, US-led NATO for its part, has called for 'vigilance' among its member countries against legal restrictions on the use of NLWs.<sup>6</sup> Furthermore, the JNLWD itself has already been accused (by campaigners) of violating the Chemical Weapons Convention in its chemical non-lethal weapons research and development. see [sunshineproject.org]

Institutionalized Torture in Military Ops?

But this is not only about R&D. The green light for application of the technology was given years ago:

"[a] ...Defense Science Board (DSB) report on Future Strategic Strike Forces advocated further development of 'non-lethal' weapons affecting the physiological or psychological functions of individuals or populations as part of an expansion of weapons with disabling effects advising that "Applications of biological, chemical, or electromagnetic radiation effects on humans should be pursued." <sup>7</sup> (my emphasis)

The same report adds that the targeting of the new weapons would include the domestic (US) civilian population:

In June 2005 the DoD's Strategy for Homeland Defense and Civil Support stated that "non-lethal" weapons would be further investigated for use in 'homeland defense'. It noted further that basic research into the physiological effects of "non-lethal" weapons would be expanded and that opportunities to share military technology with law enforcement agencies would be identified. <sup>8</sup>

This view is reaffirmed by US Secretary of the Air Force Michael Wynne, who said of non-lethal weapons in 2006 that "we need to start using that here in the US on Americans." <sup>9</sup>

Today, the technology and weaponry to inflict the studied RF bioeffects has been patented [see US patents 7784390, 20070139247 for example], fielded and is operational, according to targeted individuals; radar and microwaves are being trained on tracked (and surveilled) citizens. The identity of the actual agency doing the zapping is not verifiable because these operations, which constitute torture, are covert. Torture is illegal under the Conventional Weapons Convention, the Convention Against Torture, Geneva Convention and the Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act. Hence the secrecy and the need for cover stories to avoid legal problems. (This may also explain why some of the AFRI's research does not originate with the Pentagon but with the Department of Justice's National Institute of Justice (an instrument for militarization of state-level law enforcement), which may avoid contravening international treaties in some cases.)

The Guantanamo Precedent

The Guantanamo detention camp is a standing symbol of the fact that the US has abrogated the rule of law in favor of rule by force. It has more or less openly embraced torture as an element of its "non-lethal" arsenal, with the torture of kidnapped inmates we know about including simulated drownings, forced injections and medication, sensory deprivation or saturation--to name a few--and multiple deaths of the inmates.

Six out of the eight current US Republican presidential candidates, as well as the Democratic president, have endorsed the use of torture.

Camp Bucca, Iraq

As of this writing, the US Senate had passed a bill (2012 National Defense Authorization Act) legalizing the arbitrary military detention and torture of US citizens explicitly (effectively domesticating the 2006 Military Commissions Act.) Already the executive has assumed and exercised the extra-legal right to assassinate American citizens, including juveniles. As the smoke from 9/11 dissipates to reveal the outlines of a new police state, it should be getting clearer now for the American people who the camps are really for.

Surely it shouldn't surprise that the US is an egregious human rights violator, despite its loud, righteous and repetitive hypocritical posturing (as a liberator)--coming as it does from the lipsticked media mouth of this grizzled old slaver, chronic perpetrator of serial genocides, still on the march, towards its fourth (overt) illegal war of aggression in the space of a decade--a prolonged blitz the likes of which the world has not seen since the days of the Nazis, a close relation [see Edwin Black, War on the Weak; John Loftus, America's Nazi Secret; Jacques Pauwels, The Myth of the Good War; Charles Higham, Trading with the Enemy, etc.].

Updated Statue of Liberty

Still, the 'technical problems' of international humanitarian law remain.

RF Directed Energy Weapons --Invisible 'Taser' for Dissidents

The use of RF Directed Energy Weapons is roughly similar to other 'electroshock' weapons. Just as the cattle prod-like 'taser' weapon has been widely adopted in law enforcement to temporarily disable (or permanently kill) those targeted, pulsed microwave directed energy weapons have been covertly adopted by the US for remote incapacitation of human targets. Although loosely analogous to the police taser, an important exception is that the lower voltage microwave directed energy may be applied to the targeted person, such as a political dissident, invisibly and continually over the long-term. More properly classified as weapons of electronic warfare--a type of information war--RFDEW are used for the 'jamming' of 'enemy information systems,' which also happen to be human brains.

Coming Shift to a Health Care Pretext ?

Former history professor Newt Gingrich, an old Rockefeller hand since his days canvassing in the South for the presidential campaign of Nelson Rockefeller, was an early proponent (1986) of non-lethal weapons (see <http://metatexte.net/docs/index-2.html>). During a 2012 presidential debate appearance, Gingrich made a pitch for federally-funded neuroscience research, signaling a possible shift to recast R&D in the name [only] of Autism and Alzheimer's. That a long-time non-lethal weapons booster, Department of Defense Policy Board member and self-confessed social Darwinist should be pitch-man for a new government drive on the mental health of the elderly corroborates this view.

Dark Precedents

While RFDE weapons may be something new, the goals of mind control and behavior modification are long-standing ones. The secrecy and awkward pretexts of the current program recall several notorious precedents: the documented, long-running (begun 1953) US government MKULTRA program, thought to be behind the 'trickle-down' introduction of LSD to the American 'baby boomer' generation, as a mind-altering chemical warfare agent (Marks); Nazi mind control tests on inmates at Dachau, where other murderous experiments were performed under cover of 'aviation medicine';<sup>10</sup> the Nixon-Ford era 'Special Virus Cancer Program' (overseen by another Rockefeller hand, Henry Kissinger), in which the AIDS virus was 'discovered' following R&D by scientists working in association with the US Army bioweapons lab to 'search for the cancer virus' in the 'war on cancer'.

Forms of political organization that are anathema to universal human nature and its aspirations, upon which international law is based, are destined only for ignominy

Endnote: History has shown us that forms of political organization that are anathema to universal human nature and its aspirations, upon which international law is based, are destined only for ignominy, in the dustbin of history. From the Reichstag fire to 9/11, the shadow of German history falls today on the USA.

From where the impetus?

...Nonlethal weapons have not received the priority they merit at the Pentagon. This report makes a persuasive case for changing that., said [Rockefeller] Council [on Foreign Relations (CFR)] President Richard N. Haass., Feb 2004. <sup>11</sup>

When it is pretended that the state [Homeland] has a good different from that of its citizens, what is really meant is that the good of the government --the ruling class--is more important than that of the other people. This view has no basis but in arbitrary power.

--Science and Society, Bertrand Russell

Dangerous language

Immigration has been a central theme of the 2012 US Republican so-called presidential campaign. This is a polite format for discoursing on RACE POLITICS, a time-honored political weapon of the Right--to focus on differences--for preventing the toiling masses from uniting, as they get their pockets picked by their betters. Other race-based hate speech 'softens up' ethnic targets for attack on their countries in war.

No candidate has gone further in echoing the Nazi archetype in the use of this deadly instrument of domination than Rick Santorum, who has openly used the language of genocide, in referring to the Muslim victims and targets of America's current 'endless war' campaign:

US Republican presidential candidate Santorum on the Muslim 'enemy':

They (Muslims) are interested in destroying the world.

...Look at Europe. Europe is on the way to losing. The most popular male name in Belgium -- Mohammed. It's the fifth most popular name in France among boys. They are losing [the war] because they are not having children...

...we need to... eradicate [the enemy], and that's the final thing. ..This is going to be a long war.

--Columbia U. "Islamofascism" (sic) Awareness Week, March 2007

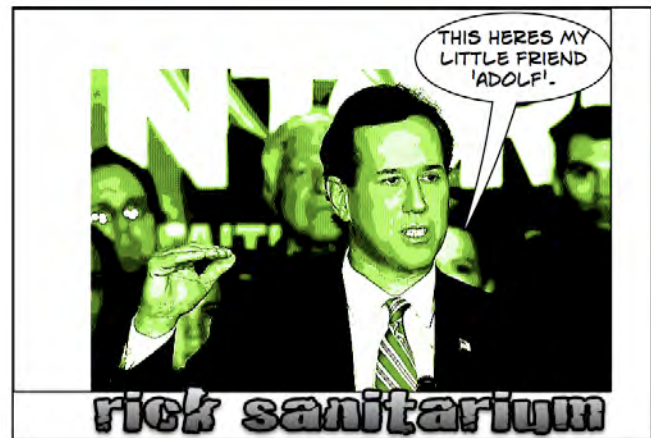

Compare this quote from a German statistics scientist in a 1937 article for the American Statistical Society entitled Development of German Population Statistics through Genetic-Biologic Stock-Taking":

[Eugenics] means the targeted selection and promotion of superior life and an eradication of those portions of the population which are undesirable. --

Friedrich Zahn, president of the Bavarian Statistical Office and SS member, data provider to the Nazi Party's Race Political Office. Excerpted from IBM and the Holocaust, Edwin Black p. 49

Hand puppet?

It's worth noting the context in which Santorum's ugly speech was given: a Columbia University "Islamofascism" Awareness Week. The equanimity with which a top American university broadcasts a racist smear ('Islamofascism') in a public forum and calls it political awareness is indicative of the retrograde temper of the times.

Incidentally, American academe was a prominent proponent of the Eugenics movement until the Nazi horrors it inspired forced more discretion. Consider Yale University's 1945* annual report, apologizing over the racial composition of the student body: "the proportion of Jews has somewhat increased and remains too large for comfort" (cited in The Secret War Against the Jews, John Loftus; *NB under Yale trusteeship of Prescott Bush).

At the level of policy, the extreme Right positions are clear, with the Republican faction candidates nearly unanimously pro-war, pro-torture, pro-police state, with discussion of racial profiling, etc. At the level of speech they are usually guarded, and settle for dropping hints at the fascist ideology behind the policy, which require a little exegesis to clarify...

When a presidential candidate in mid-campaign does a prime-time network profile interview, it is not for idle tele-chat but to take the spotlight to frame his campaign theme, mark out his political philosophy. You can be sure they are measuring their words.

Public as prey

Asked his greatest moment over a long political career, the pro-war, old soldier of the American Right Newt Gingrich seemed to answer with a catch-all metaphor, citing a trip on an African safari 'watching cheetahs basking in the sun after a kill.' ... On cue, the interviewer Piers Morgan asked if Newt's prey was Barack Obama, quickly deflecting the highly suggestive comment by a presidential candidate implying a predatory taste for social Darwinism.

Here is an illuminating description of 'dog eat dog' social Darwinism from another source: ...a world where 'each creature feeds off another' ... 'and where the death of the weakest permits the existence of the strongest', as in Nature. 'The strongest must dominate.' --Mein Kampf

Human as animal

From the same interview, candidate Gingrich on what he might have been if not a politician: "A zookeeper."

Great White Hope?

Though not a candidate in 2012, Palin was a sitting governor and candidate for VP on the 2008 GOP ticket versus Barack Obama, then as now emphasizing immigration as a campaign theme. She has since relocated from the great white North to hard-line anti-immigration Arizona, taking her sights off Russia to look instead to Mexico.

In an episode of her briefly televised Alaskan wilderness reality TV show, which featured a bear protecting its cub, the candidate and mother of four commented significantly: that Mama grizzly's gotta do what she can to save the species (not save her cub). Immigration. Save the species. Get it? A safe but crypto-fascist subliminal appeal to racism.

After Fritz Lang's Metropolis

Republican Mosh Pit

Palin's running mate in 2008, John 'bomb Iran' McCain is a case apart. The Republican Party scion has no time for discreet nods and winks and no qualms about publicly calling for the torture and murder of a foreign leader (Russia's Vladimir Putin, before the blood of the fallen Nasserite Libyan leader, Moammar Qaddafi, had yet dried).

In 2008, McCain 'defended' his opponent Obama on the campaign trail when speaking at a local event with one of the screened audience members, who stammered into a proffered microphone He's...he's Arab. McCain: No Ma'am. He's a decent person.. Racist inference: Arabs are not decent people.

All but two of the original eight 2012 GOP candidates were on the record as pro-war and pro-torture, if not pro-Racist. Though Ron Paul is one of the two exceptions just cited, he has been criticized for past political newsletters in Texas said to suggest a racist viewpoint. For his part, Paul pointed the finger at his competitor Michelle 'All cultures are not equal' Bachmann, saying "She doesn't like Muslims. She wants to go after them.." [Ron Paul guesting on The Tonight Show, Jan. 2012]

Dennis Hopper portraying an American fascist in an episode of The Twilight Zone, He's Alive (i.e. Hitler), Jan. 24, 1963 (1st Bush coup later that year)

Why is it that it is the most advanced societies--the US in 2001 and Germany in 1933--that seem to fall back on the barbarity of Fascism (capitalism in full nudity) ? It is because it takes extreme violence to beat back the avant-garde of progress towards Socialism, as the people in the advanced societies, using the very platform of their advancement, begin to demand an end to their exploitation. To put it simply, when the cat gets too close to the creamer, all hell breaks loose.

The Missing German Revolution

Since the French revolution, the path of human progress has repeatedly led to climactic attempts at reforming political organization to work towards satisfying human needs, not creating more human want through ever increasing concentrations of wealth; to recognize human dignity by refusing the degradation of human status to that of animal, with both equally subject to Nature's 'law of the jungle' (survival of the fittest) in the social Darwinist order of Capitalist society; to establish collective forms of economic development in place of the old order, in which an elite minority profits from the oppression of the majority. Such high water marks in the 20th century would include the 1917 Russian revolution, the 1949 Chinese revolution (which may prove to be determinant), and the Cuban revolution of 1959, with its influence felt from Venezuela to Bolivia. Between the first two of these historical milestones (1917, 1949) is a missing Socialist revolution in Germany (1933?), crushed in its infancy under the jackboot of Naziism--a hellish measure of the old order's force of reaction against strivings for emancipation.

These climaxes or crystallizations of 'impudent' aspiration (cf. 'Audacity of Hope') engender violent reaction by the old guard--a yank on the emergency brake producing a violent halt of the sociopolitical train's progress towards its Socialist destination, and much collateral damage. To put it another way, to prolong the time of the status quo, the guardians of the old order keep turning back the clock, a → necessarily violent operation involving the 'culling' (in their reactionary view) of the constituency of real political progress. Such was the case in Germany, Europe's biggest 'domino' about to follow neighbor Russia into Communism, until private US finance and corporations helped mount the Nazi reaction to 'protect property', US investments, and Capitalism in Europe by targeting the 'Bolshevist Jew' 'agitators.'

DEUTSCHLAND SO ODER SO? Knickerbocker, H. R., @ Berlin, Rowohlt, 1932.

Originally published in English as "Germany--Fascist or Soviet?" described [Germany] ...as being on the precipice of a collapse into Nazism or Communism. From the Preface (translated): "Five thousand Bolsheviks made the Russian Revolution. In Germany, there are an estimated 6 million voters for the Communist Party. ... America alone is involved with 38% of the total direct foreign investment in Germany and consequently has a greater interest in the preservation of private capitalism in the Republic than any other country in the world with the exception of Germany itself."

The 1968 political awakening in the West that was only a stirring by comparison was violently put down in the US with multiple assassinations and chemical weapons (LSD*) but was reverberating there like an aftershock in the late 1990s as a nascent anti-corporate movement, evident in the Battle of Seattle WTO protests (1999), the birth of the anti-Davos World Social Forum (Jan. 2001), and finally in Genoa's G8 protest (July 2001). This pro-democracy movement was even more lucid than the 1960s anti-war protests because it was focusing directly on the "corporate tyranny" behind the wars.

The Conspiracy

Every class which successively has seized power has sought to safeguard its position of mastery by imposing on society conditions calculated to ensure it its own revenue. 1

9/11

As on a chessboard, no moves in the Great Game have a single purpose or effect, and violent repression would be only the domestic component of a regression from postwar financial imperialism to the genuine article, launched in the style of the Nazi's Reichstag fire—a treacherous attack, as casus belli.

Repression at home. Adventure abroad

The hammer came down first on the American public itself in a level of violence not used domestically since Civil War days (by Republicans). It was a slow-motion coup d'etat that would put the reactionary New Order program in place, within a year of Seattle. It began with the 2000 election theft, and culminated spectacularly—like a 1970's Hollywood disaster film** —on 9/11, with a purge at the Pentagon ('under renovation'), followed by a 'warning shot' bioweapons (anthrax) attack on the opposition in Congress and in the media, and effective suspension of the US Constitution and rule of law.

The 'bloody shirt' would be continually waved as the crusading Republicans' war banner and the Muslims, unfortunate inhabitants of the targeted strategic lands, would be 'the new Jews,' from Afghanistan to Iraq to Libya to Syria... in a denied because unacknowledged Muslim Holocaust.

As Zbigniew Brzezinski said in his enlightening and sadly prophetic book of 1998, The Grand Chessboard, it would take "a new Pearl Harbor" to launch abroad the 'strategically imperative' series of wars 'necessary' to further project American power onto the giant Eurasian continent (and seize oil treasure), before the window of opportunity for a "New American Century" should close there, with Russian recovery and the rise of China.

Hoarse from Crying 'Wolf'

The on-again off-again 'war on terror' theme may now have been played out, tarnished after the Americans' "whack a mole" game went on too long, in too many target countries, where the mercenary 'terrorists' would 'fortuitously' pop up, straining credulity, until finally coming full circle as a NATO proxy force in Libya, just like old times in Carter-era Afghanistan, where the relationship had started back in 1979. The fraudulent wars point back to the original fraud of 9/11 itself--a crime that will have to await an American Truth and Reconciliation Commission à la South Africa for legal justice. But history also exacts justice: In the Middle Ages, when the Roman Church falsely cried "Crusade" for too long, the result was not conquest of the Muslim world, but the Protestant Reformation. No use telling that to a 'wolf that eats and listens to no one.'

Shared Ideology

World as profit factory, consuming productive 'human resources' as Labor and 'counter-productive' populations through war and covert extermination.

'Fill 'er up'

Beyond cynicism - Human commodities

In the utterly materialistic and mechanistic fascist ideology of American capitalism, humanity has no more important a place in the order of things than any other commodity--'human resources.' Humanity is reduced to Labor. The part of humanity not factoring into the profit imperative as an element of production and consumption (the poor) is eminently dispensable, not having economic value or having 'negative value' as an obstacle to access to valuable resources or otherwise strategic lands (Afghans, Iraqis, African AIDS victims, Libyans and other 'combustibles').

The capitalist demarcation of groups into productive and 'counter-productive' was never so starkly laid bare as in Nazi Germany, where 'non-elect' populations were distributed between Labor camps and Extermination camps. Today, 'attrition' of populations overtly through war or by covert attacks [see for example 'DU Nuke War' article, p. 12] serves the same purpose of 1) eliminating 'uneconomic' communities, i.e. obstacles to corporate profit, or 2) eliminating models of, or constituencies for independent economic development, as in Haiti, under UN auspices; recently in Libya; and formerly in Yugoslavia, Chile, Vietnam, Indonesia, Guatemala, Korea, Greece, Germany, etc., ...that cannot or will not be integrated into the system of exploitation (enslavement). These constituencies for collectivism also include ancient cultures like that of the indigenous peoples, and more recent Islamic civilization, whose humanism and vestiges of tribalism inherently favor the alternative and more humane economic arrangement of 'taking care of their own,' particularly in the politics of fundamentalists. For the West, this is a parallel economic reason for targeting them. Here, at last is a point in common for Muslim and Jew, both victims of Western genocide.

Parenthetically, the propaganda of the American entertainment sphere has recently taken up the refrain "We take care of our own (wherever this flag is flown)" in a current pop song, which opened the Grammys, where it was called 'an anthem for our time.' Which begs the question, since when did the

US go Socialist? What about the raging class war as background, the open scorn for the public, the lack of a Left tradition or culture since the 1930s, the presumptive Repub. presidential nominee's declaration "I'm not concerned with the Poor," as well as a consistent national track record of killing 'commies'? Best understood then as demagoguery, in the feint Left, go Right style of National 'Socialism.'

Reinventing Nazi horror

The world has already witnessed, to its horror, the logical conclusion of fascist ideology that debases the human to the level of animal/commodity. It found its hideous, ultimate expression in the manufacture of soap out of victims of Nazi murder.

The destruction and genocide in Iraq and Afghanistan are epic crimes against humanity. Less apparent is the present targeting of future generations through the use of toxic radiation weapons like 'depleted' uranium, particularly in Iraq, attacking the very genetic stock of a people, to pre-empt future resistance to the extraction of their sovereign resources.

see article 'DU Nuke War', p. 12

Short of fuel

The problem for the US-led West is that the rest of the world does not subscribe to the apotheosis of profit, or sacrifice to Moloch, peopled as it is by many ancient, peace-loving, tolerant and humanistic civilizations, in the true sense of the word (an understanding of the intrinsic value of the human is inherent in the culture). No one informed them that they are mere 'livestock' to be culled, or 'cord wood' to be combusted for the greater good and comfort of an elite financial aristocracy in private banking and its corporate relations. They cling to the belief in a God-given right to life. They become highly indignant at the murder of family, friend, neighbor and other innocents. And there is the crux of America's problem: despite their overwhelming military superiority, they cannot kill fast enough.

It would seem in March 2012 that civilized peoples who refuse the fascist equating of human and animal have finally managed to put a brake on the run-away, blood-fueled profit machine of Murder, Inc. USA, the only empire to have "gone from barbarism to decadence without passing through civilization"--Oscar Wilde.

Taking One for the Team

9/11 may well turn out to have been the empire's own suicide shot, unintentionally hastening a providential end to a system that resolves the contradiction between profit and humanism by enshrining profit and denying human dignity; that finds the place of humanity to be on a balance sheet, a perennial drag on 'earnings' (labor cost, etc.) in a deadly, profit-first paradigm. This is the ideological basis of a warped way of life in an upside-down, profoundly dysfunctional society in all but profit-taking, that has left its citizens physically misshapen (with widespread obesity), to say nothing of less apparent mental deformation (a fresh market for Big Pharma, in psychotropics). These are symptoms of an inhumane environment of toxicity and violence, exported through 'globalization' and war, proffered as model for permanent world government. A terrifying prospect.

As they say at Porto Allegre, another world is possible.

Following are unretouched DVD stills with actual subtitles from a 1974 Hollywood disaster movie that uncannily foreshadows events of 9/11/2001, possibly dating the coup planning to the ultra-Right, post-60s turbulence-Ford Administration, which included the Bush regime chiefs Cheney and Rumsfeld, under VP Nelson Rockefeller. Cheney would reprise Nelson's role as VP commander fronted by a stooge, stand-in president. Movie poster: The Towering Inferno, 1974 [All images unretouched].
